5. Information Security

Employees are responsible for protecting company information.

They must use approved authentication mechanisms, avoid sharing credentials and store business documents only in authorized locations.

Suspicious emails, unauthorized access attempts and potential information disclosures must be reported to IT and Security.

Access to internal documents is determined by document-level permissions and assigned memberships.

A platform role such as ADMIN does not automatically grant unrestricted access to every confidential document.

6. Company Equipment

Company-issued laptops, workstations and storage devices must be used responsibly.

Employees must not install unauthorized software, disable security controls or transfer restricted documents to personal storage.

Equipment faults should be reported to IT Support.

All company equipment must be returned during employee separation.

7. Performance and Development

Employees are evaluated based on work quality, goal achievement, professional competency, collaboration and accountability.

Managers must communicate performance expectations and provide feedback.

Quarterly performance evaluations are coordinated by Human Resources.

Employees may participate in internal training programs organized by Learning & Development.

8. Conflict of Interest

Employees must disclose personal interests that may influence business decisions.

Examples include participating in procurement decisions involving personal relationships or approving payments to organizations in which the employee has a financial interest.

Disclosures must be submitted to HR for review, with Finance involvement where necessary.

9. Employee Separation

The employee exit process includes resignation confirmation, manager acknowledgment, equipment return, HR clearance, financial settlement and system access revocation.

Relevant departments must coordinate to ensure that access is removed according to the approved separation date.
